

UNFORGOTTEN

Connecticut's Hidden History of Slavery

When we think of slavery in the U.S., we don't usually think of the North. The history of Northern slavery has been locked away, erased. Now stories of the enslaved are being uncovered and reclaimed. Connecticut Public explores this hidden history in a special series on radio, TV, podcast, and online – featuring historians, experts and descendants of the enslaved.

Miss Springmaid

“Colonel” Elliott White Springs spearheaded an innovative ad campaign to sell bed sheets that changed the approach of the country’s advertising industry. He began acquiring and commissioning artwork depicting attractive young women as “Springmaids.” He copiously employed sexual innuendo in his ad copy. Many were outraged by his approach, but there was convincing proof that “sex sells.”
